Case study – Beton Bauen Limited

With figures today claiming we are out of the recession and figures at the start of the year claiming certain aspects of the economy are on the increase, such as manufacturing and mortgage approvals, it is clear we have finally entered a period of steady recovery.

One company who has not only kept a steady flow of business but has in fact made impressive profit within the three years they have been up and running is Beton Bauen Limited – Specialist Construction Applications.

Beton Bauen Limited are specialists in concrete repair and protection. With over 25 years experience in the specialist application market, both in the UK and overseas their clients require technical solutions and advice on the use of specialist construction products for structural waterproofing and concrete repair.

Based at Phoenix Park in Newport, Steve Davies, Director of Beton Bauen Limited said of his company: “We have recently celebrated our third birthday are doing better than ever considering the economic climate we are in. The industry has been hit hard but we are still going strong and are currently working on a number of contracts, one of which includes the Olympic Village.

Current projects include works at Newport University and The Old Arts College, both ongoing in the local area. We also have a number of large contracts due to commence shortly at Ystrad Mynach Hospital and a very exciting project to erect a monumental art feature in Cardiff Bay.

“We are based in Newport but cover contracts across the UK and Ireland and are hoping to expand again this year internationally. Having our base in Newport has meant we have great connections with the M4 making it easy to access our clients. We are based at Phoenix Park after moving from a different unit through Centre for Business and have found the help from them extremely supportive.

David Russ, Managing Director of Centre for Business, said: “It is always great to hear of businesses doing so well during a tough period in the economy and its even better to think we at the Centre for Business have helped Beton Bauen by providing them with an attractive contract for their unit at Phoenix Park which has offered them a larger, brand new secured unit.”
